Project Details

- The overall goal of the project is for people who are at risk of suicide, have attempted suicide or who are bereaved by suicide to get the right care in the right place at the right time.
- The project aims to better understand existing suicide prevention care pathways in the community, primary care and the hospital settings.
- Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, LGBTI+ communities and young adult / middle aged men have been identified as priority populations.
- Findings from the Care Pathways project will be used to inform the future of suicide prevention pathways, services and resources.
